She's so tired. She was up until after two, reading. She hasn't asked the doctor about it; she's afraid he'll ask her to stop reading altogether. She promises that tonight she'll read less. She'll go to sleep by midnight, at the latest.

She says to Ritchie, "Guess what we're going to do today? We're going to make a cake for your father's birthday. Oh, what a big job we have ahead of us."

He nods gravely, judiciously. He seems unconvinced about something.

She says, "we're going to make him the very best cake he's ever seen. Don't you think that's a good idea?" Again, Ritchie nods.

Laura watches him through the cigarette smoke. She will not go upstairs, and return to her book. She will remain. She will do all that's required, and more. She kneels down to show him the sifted flour. "Now, we have to measure out four cups."
